To evaluate the effect of foscinopril treatment on albumin excretion and morphometric changes in glomeruli in microalbuminuric patients with type 2 diabetes. Twenty-six newly diagnosed type 2 diabetic patients with microalbuminuria, defined as urine albumin to creatinine ratio (ACR) 20-199 microg/mg were randomized into two groups: 10 patients received foscinopril (10 mg o.d.) and 16 patients received placebo in a double blind randomized design. All patients were given a short course (6 months) of lifestyle modification including dietary modification and exercise. The urine ACR, blood pressure, body weight, urine creatinine, urine albumin, lipids, and blood glucose levels were measured at baseline and every 3 months after randomization. The extracapillary fraction (ECF) of glomerular volume was calculated using stereological techniques. Compared with placebo, foscinopril treatment significantly decreased the urine ACR from 176 +/- 49 to 82157476af
